EXPLANATORY NOTE

(This note is not part of the Regulations.)

These Regulations further amend the Motor Cars (Driving Instruction) Regulations 1991 (“the principal Regulations”) as follows.

Regulations 3 and 5 amend, respectively, regulations 2 and 5 of the principal Regulations by replacing the written examination currently taken by those wishing to become driving instructors with a new two part theory test. The first part of the new two part theory test is a test of driving theory. The second part consists of a test of the candidate’s ability to recognise hazards to driving (a “hazard perception test”).

Regulation 4 amends regulation 9 of the principal Regulations by changing all references to the written examination to the theory test and removing references to transitional arrangements which were relevant to changes made when the principal Regulations became operative.

Regulations 7 and 8 amend, respectively, regulations 16 and 24 of the principal Regulations by changing all references to the written examination to theory test.

Regulation 6 amends regulation 11 of the principal Regulations by –

- (a) correcting an error regarding height of figures and letters on number plates in relation to the eyesight test; and
- (b) providing for a shortened distance for the eyesight test where the number plate has the new reduced character width.
