

FINANCIAL SERVICES (BANKING REFORM) ACT 2013

EXPLANATORY NOTES

COMMENTARY

Part 1 – Ring-Fencing

Ring-fencing

21. Section 1: Objectives of the Prudential Regulation Authority
22. Section 1 amends FSMA to require the PRA, when acting in relation to ring-fencing matters (that is, the matters specified in the new subsection (4A) inserted in section 2B of FSMA) to further its general objective (promoting the safety and soundness of PRA-authorised persons) by exercising its functions so as to protect the continuity of core services.
23. Subsection (2)(b) amends section 2B of FSMA, inserting paragraph (c) into subsection (3) so as to provide that when the PRA is discharging its general functions in relation to ring-fencing matters (see below), it must advance its general objective in a way that ensures that the business of ring-fenced bodies is carried on in a way that avoids any adverse effect on the continuity of core services; ensures that the business of ring-fenced bodies is protected from risks arising elsewhere in the financial system (whether in the United Kingdom or otherwise); and that minimises the risk that the failure of a ring-fenced body or of a member of its group would harm the continued provision of core services in the United Kingdom. The PRA is not required to ensure that a particular ring-fenced body does not fail, provided that its failure can be so managed that the continued provision of core services elsewhere in the UK is not adversely affected. Subsection (4) inserts in section 2B of FSMA a new subsection (4A), which lists the ring-fencing matters to which subsection (3)(b) of that section applies. They comprise: Part 9B (which relates to ring-fencing), ring-fenced bodies, bodies which are members of the same corporate group as a ring-fenced body, and applications for permission under Part 4A of FSMA which would lead to the applicant becoming a ring-fenced body. Subsection (5) amends section 2J of FSMA to state what “failure” means in the case of a person who is not an “authorised person”, as not all members of the same group as a ring-fenced person will necessarily be authorised persons.

Section 2: Modification of objectives of the Financial Conduct Authority

24. Section 2 amends FSMA to give the Financial Conduct Authority (“FCA”) a new continuity objective. This is applicable only if a core activity is not regulated by the PRA and accordingly falls under the remit only of the FCA. New section 1EA defines the “continuity objective”: the protection of the continued provision in the UK of core services. This objective will be relevant when the FCA is exercising its general functions in relation to the ring-fencing matters listed in subsection (2) of the new section 1IA. Subsection (3) of that section sets out the ways in which the FCA is to be required to advance the continuity objective. The focus is on ensuring that there is no adverse effect on the continuity of the core services in the United Kingdom. The modification of section 1B(4) of FSMA by section 2 would have the effect that promoting effective competition in the interests of consumers would be relevant when the FCA is acting so as to advance its continuity objective.

Section 3: Amendment of PRA power of direction

25. Section 3 amends section 3I of FSMA so that the PRA may by direction require the FCA to refrain from specified action if in the opinion of the PRA that action may threaten the continuity of core services provided in the United Kingdom.

Section 4: Ring-fencing of certain activities

26. Section 4(1) inserts new Part 9B (ring-fencing) into FSMA.
27. New section 142A(1) defines “ring-fenced body” for the purposes of FSMA, as any UK institution which carries on at least one core activity for which it has been given a Part 4A permission under FSMA. Subsection (2) excludes building societies from the definition of “ring-fenced bodies” and gives the Treasury power to exclude other institutions from the definition by order. This power will enable the Treasury to provide that only banks above a certain size will be required to be “ring-fenced bodies”. Subsection (3) sets out the condition which must be satisfied before the Treasury are able to make such an order: the Treasury must be satisfied that excluding the classes of institution in question from the definition of a ring-fenced body would not harm the continued provision in the United Kingdom of core services. Subsection (4) requires the Treasury to consider the impact the exercise of their powers to exempt certain UK institutions from the definition of “ring-fenced body” might have on competition in the provision of core services, and whether any adverse impact might be mitigated. Subsection (6) allows the Treasury to set conditions on the grant of an exemption from the definition of a “ring-fenced body”, and subsection (7) defines “UK institution” for the purposes of the section.
28. New section 142B defines “core activity” for the purpose of FSMA. Subsection (2) provides that the regulated activity of accepting deposits is to be a core activity, but also gives the Treasury power to provide for exceptions to this, by making an order setting out circumstances in which accepting deposits is not to be treated as a core activity. The Treasury therefore have power to provide (for example) that accepting deposits of high net-worth individuals, or large corporate entities, is not a core activity, so that such deposits may be held in banks which are neither ring-fenced bodies nor exempt under section 142A(2) from the obligations that apply to ring-fenced bodies.
29. Subsections (3) and (4) set out the conditions which must be satisfied before the Treasury are able to make an order setting out circumstances in which accepting deposits is not a core activity. The Treasury must be satisfied that it is not necessary for accepting deposits in those circumstances to be treated as a core activity either to protect the depositors specified in the order, or to protect the continued provision of the core services in the United Kingdom.
30. Subsection (5) gives the Treasury power to provide for additional core activities (and, when creating a new core activity, to provide for the circumstances in which the carrying on of the activity concerned is not to be considered to be a core activity).
31. Subsection (6) sets out the conditions which must be satisfied for the Treasury to designate a new core activity by order. First, the Treasury must be satisfied that an interruption in the provision of the services which are provided in the carrying on of that activity would harm UK financial stability (or the financial stability of a significant part of the UK financial system), and secondly, the Treasury must consider that making the activity in question a core activity is a more effective way of protecting the continued provision of those services.

32. New section 142C defines “core services” for the purposes of FSMA. Subsection (2) defines the “core services” which are associated with the core activity of accepting deposits (the only core activity specified in primary legislation), by identifying the categories of services which are to be “core services”. It will not be necessary for ring-fenced bodies to provide every possible service which could be described as falling into these categories. Some banks only provide for certain forms of payment from their accounts. Some banks may choose not to provide any overdraft facilities. Subsection (3) gives the Treasury power to require that any service not included in the categories listed in subsection (2) which is provided in connection with the core activity of accepting deposits is also to be considered to be a core service. Subsection (4) requires that, when the Treasury creates a new core activity in the exercise of its power under section 142B(5), the Treasury must also identify those services provided in the course of that activity which are to be core services.
33. The definition of core services is intended to be comprehensive, and those services which do not fall within the categories of services listed in subsection (2), and are not specified as core services in an order made by the Treasury under subsection (3) or (4) will not be core services, however closely they are associated with a particular core activity.
34. New section 142D defines “excluded activity” for the purposes of FSMA. Subsection (2) provides that the regulated activity of dealing in investments as principal is an excluded activity, but also gives the Treasury power to provide for exceptions to this, by making an order setting out the circumstances in which dealing in investments as principal is not to be an excluded activity.
35. Subsection (3) sets out the condition which must be satisfied before the Treasury may make such an order. The Treasury must be satisfied that allowing ring-fenced bodies to deal in investments on their own account in the specified circumstances will not cause significant harm to the continued provision of core services in the United Kingdom.
36. Subsection (4) gives the Treasury power to provide for additional excluded activities (and, when creating a new excluded activity, to provide for the circumstances in which the carrying on of the activity concerned is not to be considered to be an excluded activity). Subsection (5) clarifies that the activity concerned need not be regulated under FSMA. Subsections (6) and (7) set out the conditions which must be satisfied before the Treasury may provide for an additional excluded activity. Under subsection (6), the Treasury are required to consider the risks which would arise for the ring-fenced body in the event that it carried on the activity concerned, and whether permitting a ring-fenced body to carry on that activity would increase the risk that its failure would harm the continued provision of the core services in the UK. Subsection (7) requires the Treasury to be of the opinion that it is necessary or expedient to make the order to protect the continued provision in the UK of the core services.
37. New section 142E gives the Treasury power to make an order imposing prohibitions on ring-fenced bodies. Subsection (1) specifies the prohibitions which may be imposed in such an order. Subsection (2) specifies the conditions which must be satisfied before the Treasury may make such an order. The Treasury must have regard to the risks to which a ring-fenced body would be exposed if it did anything the Treasury propose to prohibit in the order, and consider whether allowing a ring-fenced body to do the things prohibited in the order would increase the chance that the failure of the ring-fenced body would harm the continuous provision of the core services in the UK. Under subsection (3), the Treasury must also be of the opinion that it is necessary or expedient to make the order to protect the continued provision in the UK of the core services. Under subsection (4) an order made under this section may also contain exemptions from the proposed prohibitions, and make any such exemptions subject to conditions.
38. New section 142F makes additional provision as to what may be included in an order made by the Treasury under new sections 142A, 142B, 142D or 142E. In particular, the Treasury are given power to confer powers on either the FCA or the PRA in such an order. They may authorise the regulator to make rules or other instruments, and, under subsection (2), make the exercise of the regulator's new powers (including any rule-making power provided for) subject to conditions or requirements set out in the order. The Treasury are also permitted to include in an order made under these provisions references to publications of different bodies (such as rules made by one of the regulator) as those publications are amended from time to time.

39. New section 142G provides for the consequences where a ring-fenced body carries on any excluded activity, or contravenes any prohibition imposed under new section 142E. Under subsection (1) a ring-fenced body which has done this is treated as having contravened a requirement imposed on that body by the regulator under FSMA. It will in consequence be liable to the disciplinary measures and penalties which the regulators may impose under Part 14 of FSMA. However, under subsection (2), the ring-fenced body will not have committed a criminal offence solely by reason of the contravention, and transactions entered into contrary to a prohibition remain valid. Further, no-one will be able to rely on the contravention to bring an action for breach of statutory duty against the ring-fenced body, unless the Treasury make express provision for this in the exercise of the power given in subsection (3). Subsection (4) defines "the appropriate regulator" for the purposes of the section.
40. New section 142H makes provision requiring the PRA and the FCA to make rules about ring-fencing. It requires (in subsection (1)) the appropriate regulator (which will be the PRA in relation to PRA-authorized persons, and the FCA in relation to other authorized persons) to make rules ensuring that ring-fenced bodies have appropriate arrangements in place for the supply of services and facilities which they need to carry on the core activity. Subsection (1) also requires the appropriate regulator to make rules for certain purposes ("the group ring-fencing purposes"), which apply to ring-fenced bodies and to authorized persons that are members of a ring-fenced body's group. The group ring-fencing purposes are set out in subsection (4). They are intended to ensure that a ring-fenced body has the ability to take decisions for itself, and is both economically and operationally independent of the other members of the group, in the sense that it is not reliant on resources provided by the group and would be able to continue carrying on the core activities even if one or more other companies in the group become insolvent. Further, the areas where the regulator is required to make rules for the group ring-fencing purposes are listed in subsection (5). Each area is concerned with the regulation of the relationship between the ring-fenced body and the group: such as the terms on which it contracts with other members of the group (paragraph (a)), payments it may make to the group (paragraph (b)), disclosure of intra-group transactions (paragraph (c)), and the composition and independence of its board of directors (paragraph (d)). In addition, the regulator is required to make rules in relation to the remuneration and human resources policies (defined in subsections (6) and (7) respectively) of a ring-fenced body, and its risk management arrangements (paragraphs (e), (f) and (g)), to ensure that these policies and arrangements are separate to those of other companies of the group. Finally, in paragraph (h), the regulator is required to make any other rules which it considers to be necessary or expedient to achieve the purposes set out in subsection (4) whether or not the rules concerned fall within one of the areas listed in subsection (5). These provisions do not limit the general rule-making power of either regulator. Each regulator may also make any other rules it considers to be necessary or expedient, in the case of the PRA, for the purpose of advancing its general objective or, in the case of the FCA, to advance one or more of its operational objectives.
41. Subsection (2) of new section 142H provides that the power given to the Treasury in section 142E(1)(c) to prohibit ring-fenced bodies from holding shares or voting power in other companies in specified circumstances does not prevent the regulator exercising its own power to make general rules imposing restrictions in this area, but rules made by the regulator are subject to any such provision made by the Treasury. For example, if the Treasury made an order which prevented a ring-fenced body from having a shareholding of more than 10% in a certain type of company, it would not be possible for the regulator to make rules preventing ring-fenced bodies from having shareholdings of more than 5%.

42. New section 142I gives the Treasury power to specify further what matters must be dealt with by rules made by the regulator in each of the areas specified in section 142H(5), or to require the regulator to make rules in other areas, if this is necessary to ensure the independence of the ring-fenced body from the other members of its group.
43. New section 142J requires the PRA (and where relevant the FCA) to carry out a review of their ring-fencing rules and of any rules they have made under section 192JA applying to parent undertakings every five years, to report to the Treasury on that review, and publish the report. The Treasury must lay a copy of the report before Parliament.
44. New sections 142K to 142V set out the powers of the PRA and the FCA to require groups including a ring-fenced body to restructure themselves, and provide for the procedure which must be followed when those powers are exercised. New section 142K sets out four conditions at least one of which must be satisfied before “the group restructuring powers” (see section 142L) may be exercised. Conditions A to C reflect the group ring-fencing purposes provided for in section 142H: under condition A, the regulator must be satisfied that the ring-fenced body’s core business is being harmed by the conduct of a member of its group, under condition B, the regulator must be satisfied that the ring-fenced body cannot carry on that business independently of its group, and under condition C, the regulator must be satisfied that the insolvency of a member of its group would prevent the ring-fenced body carrying on its core business. Under Condition D, the group restructuring powers may be exercised if the regulator is satisfied that the conduct, present or past, of a member of the group is making it more difficult to achieve the continuity element of the regulator’s objective. It is only necessary for one of the four conditions to be satisfied for the regulator to be able to exercise the group restructuring powers.
45. New section 142L sets out the group restructuring powers for each regulator. Any authorised person in the group, and any UK incorporated parent undertaking of the ring-fenced body, may be required to divest itself of specified property (including shareholdings in the ring-fenced body, or any other member of the group) and to apply to the court for approval of a ring-fencing transfer scheme, to enable it to transfer part of its business to another entity. This section also provides for the case where the PRA or the FCA wishes to impose a requirement on an entity for which it is not the appropriate regulator. The PRA is given power to require the FCA to impose the relevant requirement. The FCA is given an equivalent power where it is the appropriate regulator, and it wishes to impose a requirement on a PRA-authorised person. The powers set out in this section include a power to require a ring-fenced body to make arrangements discharging it from liabilities specified by the regulator (subsection (5)(c)). In some cases the regulator may be able to impose the same requirements on authorised persons under sections 55L or 55M. Subsection (8) makes it clear that this does not affect the regulator’s use of the group restructuring powers set out in this section.
46. New section 142M requires the regulator to issue preliminary notices where it proposes to exercise any of the group restructuring powers. Notices must be given to the person on whom the requirement is imposed (referred to as “the person concerned”), to the ring-fenced body and to any other authorised person who may be affected by the exercise of those powers. The preliminary notice must state what action the regulator proposes to take, and why the regulator considers that the group restructuring powers have become exercisable. A copy must be provided to the Treasury. The recipients of the notice (referred to as “the relevant persons”) are given the opportunity to make representations to the regulator.
47. New section 142N sets out the next stage of the process. After the issue of the preliminary notice, the regulator may at any time give the relevant persons a notice stating it will not exercise its group restructuring powers. However if it proposes to continue it may take no further action for a period of 3 months. Once that period has expired it has 3 months within which to decide whether to proceed by issuing a warning notice. The regulator must take into account any representations made by the relevant persons in response to the preliminary notice and anything done by those concerned to address its concerns in the period since the end of the preliminary stage, and must obtain the consent of the Treasury before it may issue a warning notice. The regulator is not limited to exercising the group restructuring powers in the way specified in the preliminary notice – if circumstances have changed (or if the person concerned consents) the warning notice may specify different action.

48. Following the warning notice, after consideration of any representations made in response to it, the regulator must within a reasonable period issue a decision notice setting out the action it proposes to take. After those representations have been considered, the regulator may issue a decision notice. The decision notice must specify the date by which any divestment required by the notice has to be completed.
49. New section 142O gives those who have received a decision notice in relation to the exercise by either regulator of its group restructuring powers (or who should have received such a notice under new section 142N) the right to refer the decision to the Upper Tribunal.
50. New section 142P permits the regulator to vary any requirement imposed in the exercise of its group restructuring powers, provided that the person concerned consents to the variation. The PRA may also vary a direction given to the FCA requiring it to impose a requirement on the person concerned, and the FCA may vary a direction when it has used its equivalent power to direct the PRA. Anyone who is a person concerned may apply for a variation of a requirement imposed on them. Such an application is subject to the same procedure as an application for a variation of a Part 4A permission given under FSMA 2000.
51. New section 142Q provides that where the PRA is considering imposing a requirement on an authorised person that is not a PRA-authorised person by way of a direction to the FCA, the PRA must consult the FCA before giving a preliminary notice, warning notice or decision notice in the proceedings. The FCA would be subject to the same requirement if it wished to direct the PRA to impose a requirement on a PRA-authorised person.
52. New section 142R explains the relationship between the group restructuring powers and the powers of the regulator to impose requirements on authorised persons or to direct qualifying parent undertakings to take specified action under the existing powers referred to in subsection (6). The regulator is not permitted to exercise its existing powers to effect a change of control of the ring-fenced body so that it is no longer controlled by an existing member of the group, or to require companies in the same group as a ring-fenced body to cease undertaking any excluded activity. Subject to this, the regulators' powers under sections 55L, 55M and 192C are not in any way limited by the provisions of new sections 142K to 142Q.
53. New section 142S enables the regulator to impose penalties on, or publish a statement of censure in relation to, a qualifying parent undertaking who has breached a direction given under new section 142L. Such action may not be taken outside the limitation period (as defined in subsection (5)).
54. New section 142T sets out the procedure the regulator must follow before taking action under section 142S. Subsection (7) provides that a person who has received a penalty or been the subject of a statement of censure may refer the matter to the Tribunal.
55. New section 142U requires a regulator to provide a copy of any statement of censure to certain persons (including the person in respect of whom it is made).

56. New section 142V requires the FCA and PRA to prepare a statement of policy with respect to the imposition of, and amount of, penalties under new section 142S. The regulator must have regard to any such statement when exercising its power to impose a penalty. The statement must be published, and a copy must be provided to the Treasury.
57. New section 142W gives the Treasury power to make regulations in relation to the pension liabilities of ring-fenced bodies. Under subsection (1) they may require requiring ring-fenced bodies to make arrangements to ensure that they will only be liable for pension liabilities arising after a specified date in connection with employment in a ring-fenced body in relation to their pension liabilities, and that their liabilities in relation to pension liabilities arising before that date cannot be increased by the default of any other person. Where this is not possible, the regulations may require ring-fenced bodies to take steps to minimise their potential pension liabilities. Under subsection (2) the regulations may also enable the trustees or managers of pension funds to transfer all or part of the pension liabilities arising before the specified date to another pension scheme, or to divide their existing pension scheme into two or more sections. Under subsections (3) and (4) where ring-fenced bodies have been unable to reach any agreement with third parties necessary to enable them to make arrangements for the purposes set out in subsection (1), the regulations may enable them to apply to the court for an order requiring the third party to enter into appropriate arrangements on commercial terms.
58. Subsection (6) contains a non-exhaustive list of the provisions that may be included in the regulations. Many are provisions which will enable a ring-fenced body to make arrangements under existing pensions legislation, by removing potential obstacles. For example, the terms of a pension scheme may need to be modified and the trustees may have no power to do this. The regulations could give the trustees power to modify the scheme, but only with the consent of the participating employers. Similarly, the arrangements a ring-fenced body may need to make may require trustees' consent. If the trustees unreasonably refuse consent the regulations can enable a court to dispense with the need for consent. But the regulations cannot allow a court to dispense with consent where consent has been withheld reasonably. The regulations may provide that a contravention of a requirement included in them is to be treated in the same way as a contravention of a requirement imposed by the PRA under FSMA. The effect of this would be to ensure that the disciplinary powers available to the PRA under FSMA could be used to penalise any contravention of the regulations. The regulations may also modify, exclude or apply existing legislation.
59. Under subsections (7) and (8), a ring-fenced body may be required to do all it can to obtain a clearance statement from the Pensions Regulator under sections 42 or 46 of the Pensions Act 2004 (or under equivalent provisions of the Pensions (Northern Ireland) Order 2005) in relation to anything it does to comply with the regulations.
60. Subsection (9) provides that if a ring-fenced body is not a PRA-authorised person, references to the PRA are to be read as references to the FCA.
61. Subsection (10) provides that regulations made by Treasury under this section may not require ring-fenced bodies to make arrangements in accordance with regulations made under this section before 1 January 2026. Though the Treasury may require preparatory steps to be taken earlier than 2026, this means ring-fenced bodies will have until at least 2026 to ensure they have made the arrangements necessary to comply with regulations made under new section 142K.
62. New section 142X contains interpretative provisions applying to section 142W.
63. New section 142Y gives the Treasury power to make an order regulating the way in which the PRA and the FCA may exercise their functions under FSMA to impose requirements on a relevant body as to the debt which must be issued or maintained by that body. The ICB recommended that certain banks should be required to hold minimum levels of debt (or extra capital in its place if a bank chooses to do this). This is intended to facilitate the exercise of the new powers proposed in the Recovery and Resolution Directive. If, for example, a bank suffers a significant drop in the value of its assets, the powers proposed in the Directive may be exercised to impose a reduction in the value of the obligations due under the bank's debt before the bank actually becomes insolvent, so reducing the chance that the bank will need to be liquidated, undermining the stability of the financial system.

64. The Treasury may wish to specify which types of debt instrument can count towards the minimum level of debt recommended by the ICB, as the Treasury must be satisfied (and markets must believe it credible) that resolution authorities would be both prepared and able to impose losses on a bank's creditors in a crisis situation. For example, the Treasury may decide it is necessary for eligible instruments to have at least 12 months remaining on their term, because investors in longer-term instruments would be less able to withdraw their investment in the bank by demanding that their debts are repaid as a crisis approaches, and because this would give the authorities responsible for exercising the powers proposed in the Recovery and Resolution Directive a grace period to exercise those powers, restructure the firm if necessary, and restore market confidence before it needs to refinance these debt instruments.
65. Subsection (2) defines "relevant body" for the purpose of the section. Ring-fenced bodies will be relevant bodies, but the definition is not limited to ring-fenced bodies. A body corporate which has permission under FSMA to accept deposits, and a body corporate which is a member of the same group as a ring-fenced body or of another body corporate which has permission under FSMA to accept deposits which is not itself a ring-fenced body will also be "relevant bodies" for the purposes of this section. Relevant bodies will therefore include any global systemically important banks which are based in the UK, even if the bank in question is not a ring-fenced body. Subsection (3) defines "debt instrument" for the purposes of the section. The definition is a broad one: all forms of debt including bonds and any form of transferable debt would be covered. Subsection (4) contains a non-exhaustive list of the provisions that may be included in an order made by the Treasury under this section. The Treasury may both require the regulator to impose specified debt requirements on a relevant body, and limit the requirements which may be imposed. They may set out the matters to which the regulator must (or must not) have regard or refer to. They may require the regulator to consult or obtain the consent of the Treasury before it exercises its powers or require the regulator to make additional procedural provision in relation to the exercise of its functions. The Treasury may also refer in an order to a publication of any body in the UK or abroad (such as rules made by the regulator), as that publication is in force for time to time.
66. New section 142Z makes provision for the draft affirmative resolution procedure to be used in relation to orders made by the Treasury under the provisions listed in subsection (1), so that no such order may be made unless the draft order has been laid before Parliament and approved by each House (subsection (2)). Subsections (3) to (6) provide for the application of the made affirmative resolution procedure to apply to orders made under sections 142D(4) (new excluded activities) and 142E (prohibitions), where the Treasury consider that the matter is urgent so that it is not appropriate to proceed by the draft affirmative procedure. If this applies, the order may be made without being approved in draft, but it must be approved by each House of Parliament within 28 days from the day on which it is made if it is to continue in force (subsection (4)).
67. New section 142ZI explains how the references to the regulated activities of accepting deposits and dealing in investments as principal, and the references to the group restructuring powers are to be understood for the purpose of Part 9B of FSMA.
68. The effect of the amendment to section 133 of FSMA 2000 (proceedings before Tribunal: general provision) in section 4(2) is to include in the list of "disciplinary references" references to the Tribunal in relation to decisions to impose a penalty under section 142S or to issue a statement under that section censuring a qualifying parent undertaking.

69. Section 4(3) provides that the regulators may, if they consider it appropriate, publish details of any warning notice given under section 142N (procedure: warning notice and decision notice) in relation to the proposed exercise of the group restructuring powers.
70. Section 4(4) ensures that third parties affected by the issue of a warning notice or decision notice to a qualifying parent undertaking benefit from the rights in FSMA to receive a copy of that notice; and that those qualifying parent undertakings on which warning notices or decision notices are served will be given access to FCA or PRA material in relation to the decision.
71. Section 4(5) of the Act inserts definitions of “core activities”, “core services”, “excluded activities”, “ring-fenced body” and “ring-fencing rules” into section 417 of FSMA.
72. The amendments made by section 4(6) and (7) add the function of issuing statements of policy under new section 142V (with respect to the imposition and amount of penalties which may be imposed under section 142S) to the list of legislative functions of the FCA and the PRA respectively. This means that the PRA or the FCA must act through their governing bodies when issuing such statements of policy, and may not for example discharge this function through a sub-committee or an officer or member of staff.

Section 5: PRA annual report

73. Section 5 amends Schedule 1ZB (the Prudential Regulatory Authority) of FSMA to require the PRA to make an annual report on the way in which ring-fenced bodies comply with the ring-fencing provisions (defined to cover not only the obligation imposed on ring-fenced bodies under section 142G of FSMA, as inserted by the Act, but also any ring-fencing rules made by the regulator). The PRA must also report on the extent to which ring-fenced bodies are dealing in investments as principal, or doing anything which would otherwise be prohibited for ring-fenced bodies in reliance on exceptions or exemptions set out in secondary legislation made under sections 142D and 142E, or to which any guidance which it has issued in relation to ring-fencing has been complied with by ring-fenced bodies.

Section 6: Ring-fencing transfer schemes

74. Section 6 gives effect to Schedule 1, which amends Part 7 of FSMA to make provision for ring-fencing transfer schemes. Part 7 provides a mechanism for transferring, with the sanction of the court, all or part of the business of banks, insurance companies and reclaim funds, without requiring the approval of all those who may be affected by the transfer. Section 7 and Schedule 1 provide for an additional form of transfer scheme (a “ring-fencing transfer scheme”), which will enable bodies to use the procedures set out in Part 7 of FSMA to give effect to any transfers of business needed to ensure that core activities are only undertaken by ring-fenced bodies, and that no entity wishing to be a ring-fenced body carries on excluded activities.
75. Paragraph 2 of Schedule 1 replaces the expression “authorised person concerned” with “transferor concerned”, throughout Part 7, to allow for the possibility that in the case of a ring-fencing transfer scheme, the transferor may not be an authorised person.
76. Paragraph 3 amends section 103A of FSMA (meaning of “the appropriate regulator”) to provide for ring-fencing transfer schemes.
77. Paragraph 4 amends section 106 of FSMA to exclude ring-fencing transfer schemes from banking business transfer schemes, so that the categories of scheme are separate.
78. Paragraph 5 inserts new section 106B into FSMA 2000. This makes provision about ring-fencing transfer schemes. Subsection (1) defines “ring-fencing transfer scheme”. A scheme is a ring-fencing transfer scheme if the whole or part of the business to be transferred is carried on by a UK authorised person, or by a “qualifying body” (defined in subsection (2)), provided the scheme is not an excluded scheme (see subsection (4)) and is made for the purposes set out in subsection (3). The qualifying body does not have to be an authorised person.

79. Subsection (3) specifies the relevant purposes. These are: to enable the person transferring the business, or the person to whom it is transferred lawfully to carry on the core activities lawfully as a ring-fenced body; or to assist a corporate restructuring of the group of the transferor or of the transferee made in connection with one or more members of the group becoming ring-fenced bodies, whilst one or more other members of the group are not ring-fenced bodies. It is not necessary for the transfer scheme to take place at the same time that a member of the group becomes a ring-fenced body: it may be necessary for the corporate restructuring necessary to enable a banking group to reorganise its business to comply with ring-fencing requirements over a number of years before those requirements come into force, and in some cases more than one transfer may be required.
80. Subsection (4) defines excluded schemes for the purposes of the section. An excluded scheme is a scheme in which the person transferring part of their business is a building society or credit union, or a scheme which is a compromise or arrangement to which Part 27 of the Companies Act 2006 (mergers and divisions of public companies) applies.
81. Subsection (5) provides that in determining whether a business transfer is a ring-fencing transfer scheme, it does not matter whether the business is carried on in the UK.
82. Subsections (6) to (8) define “UK authorised person”, “building society”, “credit union” and “the ring-fencing provisions” for the purposes of new section 106B.
83. Paragraph 6 amends section 107 of FSMA (application for order sanctioning transfer scheme) to add a reference to ring-fencing transfer schemes (sub-paragraph (2)). It also inserts new subsection (2A), providing that no application may be made to the court for approval of a ring-fencing transfer scheme unless the PRA has consented to the application, and new subsection (2B), which requires the PRA, in deciding whether or not to approve the scheme, to have regard to the scheme report prepared in relation to ring-fencing transfer schemes under section 109A of FSMA.
84. Paragraphs 7 and 8 make provision for a report to be prepared in relation to any ring-fencing transfer scheme by a person nominated or approved for the purpose by the PRA. The report must provide information as to whether any adverse effect the proposed scheme can be likely to have on third parties is greater than reasonably necessary to achieve the purposes of the scheme.
85. Paragraph 9 amends section 110 of FSMA (right to participate in proceedings) to provide who is entitled to be heard before the court on any application for the approval of a ring-fencing transfer scheme. This includes any person who alleges he would be adversely affected by a transfer scheme. This right is limited under new subsection (5) of section 110. Such a person is not entitled to be heard on an application for the approval of a transfer scheme unless before the hearing they have filed with the court a written statement of the representations that they wish the court to consider, and served copies of the statement on the PRA and the person by whom the proposed transfer is to be made.
86. Paragraph 10 amends section 111 of FSMA (sanction of the court for business transfer schemes), extending it to apply to ring-fencing transfer schemes, and setting out the conditions which must be satisfied before the court may make an order sanctioning a ring-fencing transfer scheme.
87. Paragraph 11 and 12 amend sections 112 (effect of order sanctioning business transfer schemes) and 112A (rights to terminate etc.) to include references to ring-fencing transfer schemes.

88. Paragraph 13 amends Schedule 12 of FSMA so as to insert a new Part 2B. In that new Part, paragraph 9B provides what certificates must be obtained in support of an application to the court for the approval of a ring-fencing transfer scheme; paragraph 9C determines which authority must provide a certificate as to the financial resources of the transferee and paragraph 9D sets out what must be certified by the home state regulator of the transferee.

Section 7: Building societies: power to make provision about ring-fencing

89. Section 7 enables the Treasury to ensure that building societies are subject to restrictions equivalent to those applying to ring-fenced bodies in Part 9B of FSMA, or in rules or orders made under that Part. Building societies are excluded from the definition of a ring-fenced body under section 142A because they are already subject to significant restrictions under the Building Societies Act 1986. The powers in this section will enable the regime for building societies to be aligned with the regime which is to apply to ring-fenced bodies under Part 9B of FSMA. Section 8(1) gives the Treasury power to make regulations making provision corresponding to that made by or under Part 9B (ring-fencing) in relation to building societies, for the same purposes as the provisions in new Part 9B of FSMA, or in any secondary legislation made under powers given in that Part. The Treasury may also provide that the PRA's obligation under section 2B of FSMA (as amended by section 1) to advance its general objective, in relation to ring-fencing matters, by protecting the continuous provision within the UK of the core services, and (where applicable) the FCA's continuity objective also applies in relation to any function given to the PRA or the FCA in such regulations, or as a result of such regulations. Subsection (2) lists a number of things which may be done by the Treasury in regulations made under this power, including the amendment of the Building Societies Act 1986. Subsection (3) defines the terms "building society" and "the relevant continuity provision", for the purposes of the section.

Section 8: Independent review of operation of legislation relating to ring-fencing

90. Section 8 provides for an independent review of the ring-fencing legislation. Under subsections (1) and (2), the Treasury are required to appoint a panel of five or more people to carry out a review of the way in which ring-fencing legislation works in practice. The panel must be appointed within 2 years after that legislation has come into force. Ring-fencing legislation is defined in subsection (2) as Part 9B of FSMA (ring-fencing); the secondary legislation made under that Part, and any rules made by the PRA or by the FCA either under Part 9B, or under new section 192JA of FSMA, which permits the regulators to make rules applying to parent undertakings of ring-fenced bodies. The secondary legislation covered by the review will include, for example, any orders exempting certain classes of banks from the definition of "ring-fenced body" or providing that only deposits of individuals and small and medium sized businesses need be kept in a ring-fenced body; and any orders setting out the circumstances in which a ring-fenced body is permitted to deal in investments as principal, or specifying other activities which it may not do. The requirements which must be satisfied by members of the review panel are set out in subsections (4) and (5). They must be independent of the regulators (including the Bank of England) and the Treasury, and have no financial or other interest which might be thought to influence their views on ring-fencing. The members of the panel must include someone who has significant experience as a senior central banker or bank regulator, and more generally, the members of the panel must collectively have sufficient experience of the subjects under review to undertake the review. The Treasury is required to consult the chair of the Treasury Select Committee before appointing any members of the panel (subsection (6)), and provision is made in subsection (7) for the possibility that that Committee may be renamed or its functions be reassigned. The Panel must complete their report to the Treasury within a reasonable time after finishing the review (subsection 9) and that report must be laid before Parliament and published (subsection (10)).

Section 9: PRA review of proprietary trading

91. Section 9 requires the PRA to carry out a review of proprietary trading by banks and PRA-regulated investment firms (“relevant authorised persons”). On the completion of the review, the PRA must make a written report to the Treasury setting out their conclusions on proprietary trading, and in particular on whether any kinds of proprietary trading are likely to be especially risky to relevant authorised persons, whether the PRA’s powers are sufficient to deal with proprietary by relevant authorised persons (whether now or anticipated in the future), and on the effectiveness of any restrictions on proprietary trading imposed by other countries. The PRA’s report must be completed within 9 months of the beginning of the review, delivered to the Treasury, and laid before Parliament.

Section 10: Independent review of proprietary trading

92. Section 10 requires the Treasury (once it has received the PRA’s report on proprietary trading) to make arrangements for an independent review of proprietary trading, by appointing one or more independent reviewers, following consultation with the Chair of the Treasury Committee of the House of Commons. The independent review must state whether the reviewers agree with the conclusions of the PRA’s report; whether any additional restrictions should be imposed on proprietary trading by relevant authorised persons, and make any other recommendations the reviewers consider to be appropriate. As with the PRA’s report, the report of the independent review must be delivered to the Treasury and laid before Parliament.

Section 11: Reviews of proprietary trading: interpretation

93. Section 11 contains the interpretation provisions for section 9 (relating to the PRA’s report on proprietary trading), and section 10 (the independent review on proprietary trading).

Section 12: Right to obtain documents and information

94. Section 11 gives the panel undertaking a review of ring-fencing and the panel reviewing proprietary trading a right of access to any documents they may need for the purposes of their review, and to require anyone in possession of such documents to provide additional information or explanations the panel think necessary for its review. Any requirement the panel impose under this provision may be enforced by an application to the court for an injunction (or in Scotland, for an order of specific performance).
