The total amount of the annual long-term compensation which is to be compounded must first be calculated, i.e. the amount which the person would receive on account of that compensation, or the part of it which is to be compounded, if it were paid until "normal retiring age" (as defined in the Regulations). For each £100 so calculated, the lump sum payment will be the amount shown in the table according to the number of complete years in the period between the date of compounding and "normal retiring age".

EXPLANATORY NOTE

(This Note is not part of the Regulations.)

These Regulations provide (in Regulation 3) for the review and compounding of compensation payable under the Redundant Associations Officers Compensation Regulations 1967 to non-pensionable employees who have reached retiring age. Regulation 4 and the Schedule set out the tables to be used in putting an annual value on a capital sum (and the converse) for the purposes of the 1967 Regulations. The Regulations also amend the 1967 Regulations, the principal amendments being to provide—

- (i) that references to annual emoluments include the money value of free accommodation (including goods and services) (Regulation 5(1)(a)), and that references to relevant employment include certain war service in the case of an Association officer who became such before 1st December 1950 (Regulation 5(1)(c) and (d)), and
- (ii) that an Association officer transferred to the civil service who fails to establish his fitness for a permanent appointment therein may be treated as having lost his employment as an Association officer.
